

Ron F. Smith teaches a variety of journalism courses. He has worked for newspapers in Indiana, Ohio and Florida. His journalistic experience includes stints as a police and court reporter, sports copy editor, wire editor and news editor. Among his numerous publications are articles in Journalism Quarterly, Newspaper Research Journal, Public Relations Review, Quill and Journalism Educator. He was a research fellow at the Poynter Institute for Media Studies, researching diversity in the media and media ethics. He is the author of Groping for Ethics in Journalism, now in its sixth edition. He is also co-author of Editing Today and author of the Editing Today workbook. Both are now in their second editions.